Ethnicity, Race and Class in Africa

Donald L. Hardesty 2010-06-15

Archaeology is a component of Encyclopedia of Social Sciences and Humanities in the global Encyclopedia of Life Support Systems (EOLSS), which is an integrated encyclopedia of the Social Sciences and Humanities.

Garlake is long familiar with and has extensive practical experience of both the archaeology and the art history of Africa. Using the latest research and archaeological findings, he offers an exciting new overview of African archaeology.

The first topic deals with cultural theory, archaeological method, and the implications of archaeology for the understanding of history, society, and the environment. The second topic explores the archaeological record of human life support systems and includes chapters on foraging, farming, and pastoralism. The third topic examines the archaeological record of human populations and includes chapters on the spread of agriculture, the development of cities, and the growth of states. The fourth topic examines the archaeological record of human beliefs and includes chapters on religion, art, and literature. The fifth topic examines the archaeological record of human migrations and includes chapters on the spread of languages, the development of technology, and the growth of trade. The sixth topic examines the archaeological record of human adjustments to the environment and includes chapters on ecology, weather, and climate.

This book is intended for a readership of a wide range of disciplines, including archaeology, anthropology, history, and geography.
