Community Mobilization: A Community-Wide Approach to Community Change

Community mobilization is provided with the intention of building the community’s capacity for long-term sustainable change. Community mobilization as a theory of community change emerged from the literature of community organizing, sociology, civics, and critical pedagogy in the 1970s. These disciplines encouraged a consideration of the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) for community development. Community development has become one of the most important social forces in the planned and effective change process.
